LECH-LECHA God commands Abram to move his family to Canaan, promising him progeny and blessing. Shortly after arriving, a famine forces them to go farther south to Egypt. There, Abram's wife Sarai is taken by the Pharaoh, who is told that she is Abram's sister. When the truth is revealed, Abram and Sarai are allowed to return to Canaan with great wealth in hand. Abram separates himself from his nephew Lot after there is tension among their respective servants. But later, when Lot is captured in battle, Abram organizes his rescue and defeats his captors. Abram fears that he will die childless, but God promises that his descendants will be great and numerous. When Sarai appears to be barren, she asks her husband to procreate with her Egyptian maidservant, Hagar. Hagar becomes pregnant, then runs away after Sarai treats her cruelly. God convinces Hagar to return to the household, where she gives birth to a son, Ishmael. God commands Abram to circumcise both himself and Ishmael as a sign of God's covenant. God changes Abram's name to Abraham and Sarai's name to Sarah.
