VAETCHANAN Moses recounts to the Israelites that he pleaded with God to allow him to enter the Promised Land. God refused to reverse Moses's punishment; God allows Moses to see the land from afar. Noting how God had struck down Israelite idolaters at Baal-Peor, Moses urges the people to follow God's wise and appropriate commandments. At several points, bMoses speaks to the people as if they, and not their parents, witnessed the Revelation at Mount Sinai. After designating several refugee cities in Transjordan, Moses resumes speaking to the Israelites by repeating -- almost verbatim -- the ten utterances God said at Mount Horeb, as well as the people's initial, frightened reaction. The people must remember that there is only one God, and that their devotion must be absolute and touch every aspect of their lives. They must not grow lazy in their observance, nor should they test God, lest they feel the wrath of God's anger.
